PRESIDENT MAY VETO REPUBLICAN LABOR MEASURE

Grateful For Tax Support, Truman Studies Bill

Washington, June 18 (U.P.)—President Truman, highly gratified that the House sustained his tax bill veto, began deliberating in earnest today on whether to veto another major Republican measure—the Taft-Hartley labor control bill.

None—even among Mr. Truman's closest associates—was in position to make a firm prediction as to what he would do. Mr. Truman himself said he didn't know yet. But among those around him, there was considerable speculation that he would send Congress another veto message at noon Friday. He has until Friday midnight to act.

House Republicans, still smarting over their failure to override the tax bill veto yesterday, found some consolation in confident predictions that Mr. Truman would be the loser if he vetoed the Taft-Hartley bill.

"The President will suffer a resounding setback if he attempts to veto our labor legislation," said Chairman Fred A. Hartley, R., N.J., of the House Labor Committee.

Coming back yesterday from Princeton University, where he made a new appeal for universal military training, Mr. Truman refused to give any hint of his forthcoming action.

He said House support of his tax veto was a surprise and that he was grateful. As to the labor bill, he said he intended to spend today and tomorrow studying it; that he had not decided what to do.

Reporters, stammering for some indication of what way he would move, asked the President if he expected equal support in the House for a labor bill veto.

"I don't know that there will be a labor veto," he said quickly, chiding the newsmen for asking him a leading question.

Only a few things were known for sure in the speculation over Mr. Truman's final decision. One is that a veto has been recommended by both Secretary of Labor Lewis B. Schwellenbach and Chairman Paul Herzog of the National Labor Relations Board. Another is that Mr. Truman will rely heavily on the views of Attorney General Tom Clark. What Clark thinks of the bill is not known.

Clark's views figured prominently in Mr. Truman's surprise decision to sign the Republican-sponsored Anti-Portal Pay Bill, which had been strongly opposed by Schwellenbach.

NEED THE MONEY—Sen. Styles Bridges (left), Chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, appears with Sen. Joseph H. Ball (center) and Secretary of State George C. Marshall at a hearing during which Marshall asked Congress to restore a 55-million-dollar cut from the State Department's fiscal 1948 budget.

Labor Department Starts Revision Of Wage-Hour Law

Washington, June 18 (U.P.)—The Labor Department today began the first large-scale revision of nine-year-old minimum wage-hour regulations covering 550,000 business establishments and 20,500,000 workers.

Secretary of Labor Lewis B. Schwellenbach announced appointment of a Labor-Management committee to recommend changes in the regulations governing the exemption of white-collar salaried employees from the 40-hour maximum work week.

At the same time, wage-hour division sources said the definition of "hours worked" was being revised to include the new standards established by the Portal Pay Act passed by this Congress.

Schwellenbach has ordered a ban on further interpretations of "hours worked" until these new rules are drafted. They will be ready about August 15.

After September 12, these interpretations of hours worked become binding upon courts if an employer sues for back wages and the employer is acting in accordance with a wage-hour division interpretation.

The principal matter for Schwellenbach's new Labor-Management committee to consider is whether to raise the present $30-a-week standard for exemption of executive employees under the wage and hour law.

The 1938 Fair Labor Standards Act exempts as executives those employees in administrative, professional, local retailing of outside salesmen positions provided they meet certain tests. The Wage Hour administrator set up six tests, chief of which was that the individual be earning a salary of at least $30 a week.

The committee has been unable to bring Russia and the other big powers into agreement on such basic issues as the kind of forces the Big Five should contribute to the peace force.

With only slight hope of agreement this year, the Council set out a point-by-point debate on the military staff committee's first report, which contains 15 points of disagreement—chiefly between Russia and the Western countries.

Approval of the provision calling for forces taken from the best maintained by UN countries in 42 states after the Council agreed to debate first the points on which the Big Five military and naval men are in agreement.

Delegates then quickly approved these provisions:

1. Armed forces made available to the UN will be used against any "threat" of world peace and "attack" of world peace and "any act of aggression."

2. The forces may not be employed for purposes inconsistent with provisions and the spirit of the chapter.

3. Forces contributed to the UN when the Security Council calls for peace-enforcing action will include units of national land, sea and air forces "normally maintained as components of armed forces"

Burlington Liars Club Receives Tall Tales From Experts All Over The World

By Harman W. Nichols, United Press Staff Correspondent

Chicago, June 18 (U.P.)—The housing shortage is worse in the Northwest than anywhere, almost John Weigmann of St. Paul, Minn., reports that when the groundhog came out to look things over on groundhog day, three families moved into his hole before the little fellow could make up his mind about the weather.

That's a lie, kiddies. It's one of the tall tales submitted to the Burling (Wis.) Liars Club in its annual contest. O. C. Ulett, head man of the tall tale gang, says he is getting lies from all over the world—just like he said he did before the war. O. C. sent in these whoppers:

Dr. F. P. Cernigoi of Monroe, La., claims he was driving toward Texas one afternoon, 75 as the sun was kicking out heavy shadows. His car stalled and a kindly motorist stopped to offer his hand. Neither had a rope or chain. Finally a good Samaritan backed up the shadow of his car to the front bumper of the doctor's machine and towed him 30 miles to the next town.

Lee G. Deethaler of Beaver, Pa., swears he saw two Brooklyn Dodgers fans walking hand in hand with an umpire down Flatbush avenue, after the "buns" had lost a game.

Don Snyder of Waynesboro, Va., said it was right smart chilly in his town last winter. He went downstairs one morning to find the fire had gone out. So he opened the icebox door, ran back to his bed and crawled under the blankets until the place warmed up a little.

They have some fancy raccoons in Florida, J. A. Woodward of New Smyrna Beach writes about a fast and resourceful "coon" he knows. This sly fellow had out-run all the bound dogs in that part of the country. Woodward suggested putting a greyhound in with the hound pack. They did and off went the pups with the racing dog yipping in the lead. Finally the greyhound came limping back, his tail between his legs. One of the rings had slipped off the raccoon's tail and tightened around the dog's nose till he could hardly breathe. The truth is—it's wonderful!

Some $5,000 to $10,000 cubic feet of water per second rushed down the Iowa river past Wapello, Ia., and poured into the Mississippi. The water represented the combined torrents of the Cedar river and Iowa rivers which converge above Wapello. On an average the Mississippi River itself only carries 55,000 to 60,000 cubic feet of water per second past its confluence with the Iowa river.

The crests of the Iowa and Cedar rivers were expected to converge "in perfect synchronization" tonight, army engineers said. "Waverly, Ia., (population 5,000) was half covered with water, by a flash flood on the Cedar river. Water as much as four feet deep crashed through the door of a store operated by Mrs. Glenn Winchell.

The annual Memorial Day will be observed at Palestine Church on Saturday, June 28. The Rev. Edgar Farris will preach at 11 a.m. on that day.

The church has invited the public to attend.

4-H'ers Adopt New Slogan To Improve Rural Life In US

"Improve Rural Life by Making Home Surroundings More Comfortable, Convenient and Attractive." That's the slogan of rural youth taking part in the 1947 National 4-H Home Grounds Beautification awards program. The activity is conducted under the direction of the Extension Service in 42 states.

Its purpose is to encourage 4-H'ers to make and keep home surroundings attractive by correctly planting and caring for lawns, flowers, shrubs and trees; removing unsightly objects from yards; and painting buildings and fences.

As incentives for superior home-landscaping records, merit awards are donated by Mrs. Charles R. Walgreen, Chicago, for the tenth consecutive year. Awards comprise silver medals, gold watches and Chicago 4-H Club Congress trips, on county, state and national levels, respectively.

NEW CREST PUTS OFF MISSISSIPPI FLOOD DANGER

14,000 Acres And Iowa Towns Are Covered By River

BY UNITED PRESS
The big Des Moines river crest, pouring through a broken levee, flattened out over 14,000 acres of Missouri farmlands today, staying off for at least 24 hours a major flood threat along a 150-mile stretch of the Mississippi river.

But new torrents, spilling over the banks of the Iowa river, broke levees and flooded Iowa towns, villages and farms to the north. As the Iowa river's crest moved toward a confluence with the Mississippi, it brought a new threat to the 400,000 acres of rich bottomland farms lining the Mississippi from Wapello, Ia., to Clarksville, Mo.

The Des Moines river crest poured through a broken levee across the river from Keokuk, Ia., and flattened out over acreage already inundated by the last flood. Revising their estimates, army engineers said the threat to the Mississippi river towns would not come until Friday or Saturday.

Eighteen inches of water poured across the approaches to the Mississippi river bridge at Keokuk, and it was closed to motorists seeking to cross over to the Illinois side.

The number of homeless, which reached 20,000 in Iowa, Missouri, Illinois and Nebraska last week before dropping off, was again building up rapidly as floods swept Iowa.

The Iowa river, swollen beyond the normal size of the Mississippi, went on a rampage. It battered a weakened levee at Oakville, Ia., and Iowa State Guards began evacuating 125 families. Some 300 volunteers fought desperately through the night to hold the levee.

A break in the levee at Oakville would flood 45,000 acres of Iowa's finest farming land. The Iowa Department of Agriculture earlier predicted that most of the flooded bottom land in the southern half of the "Tall Corn State" would produce no corn this year.

In Iowa alone crop losses will run into the millions of dollars, the department said.

Some $5,000 to $10,000 cubic feet of water per second rushed down the Iowa river past Wapello, Ia., and poured into the Mississippi. The water represented the combined torrents of the Cedar river and Iowa rivers which converge above Wapello. On an average the Mississippi River itself only carries 55,000 to 60,000 cubic feet of water per second past its confluence with the Iowa river.

Death Rate Reported Downward At Meet

Washington, June 18 (U.P.)—President Truman said today that the death rate of the nation's highways is "definitely downward" but warned that the job of accident reduction "is by no means done."

Opening his second annual Highway Safety conference, the chief executive reports that the 350,000-000 vehicle miles travelled in 1946 set a new record.

And despite the fact that this was four per cent above the 1941 total, he said, the death rate was lower. In 1941, 40,000 persons died in automobile accidents; in 1946 the number was 35,500, the president said.

Monarch Promise Better Ball Games

The baseball game played Sunday by the Murray Monarchs and Brookport Blue Jackets was a flop. The Monarch boys were merely practicing for they had no competition.

But the game Sunday, June 22, will be different. The Huntingdon boys, who are noted to be pretty fine, we think, give us a good game.

The score between Murray and Brookport was 16-1 in favor of Murray.

Mr. and Mrs. Guy Gardner, Main street, returned Monday from a two weeks visit in Jacksonville, N. C., with their son, Errett Gardner, and family and their daughter, Mrs. Myrtle Gardner Reeves, and daughter, Nancy Louise.

Jeff Maddern, after four years in the Army Air Forces in the Far East, is returning to his ancestral Maryland home, Madder Hall. As a result of turns in a plane crash, he has undergone plastic surgery which has changed his face, but he hasn't yet told his family—a brother and an aunt—about this. Arriving by bus in the village near his home, he is surprised to hear a fellow-passenger, a beautiful blonde, instruct a taxi driver to take her to Madder Hall. Then his own taxi driver, Willie Sparrow, a local youth who does not recognize him—startles him by revealing that some one calling himself "Jeff Maddern" came home the previous week. Jeff, deciding to delay his homecoming until he can investigate the impostor, rents a room from Willie's mother, introducing himself as "Mr. Jeffrey." At dinner he shares a table with a Mr. Burtalser who says he has just arrived from Washington to do duck-hunting. Jeff, on an impulse, decides to pose as a writer.

CHAPTER THREE
BURTALSER'S eyebrows rose a fraction. "Oh—so you're a writer? A most interesting occupation. Fiction?"
"Sometimes, I'm a naturalist," Jeff improvised. "I write articles

"I'd be glad to make it worth your while—very much so."
There was a peculiar urgency in the big man's tone.

for nature magazines. That's why I'm here—to collect material on the duck migration through this area."
Burtalser stared a long moment before he spoke again. "I suppose you regard hunters as the lowest form of life?"

"On the contrary. Many of the duck species are too prolific. If they can't find ample feeding grounds, they starve or become victims of predatory animals. The sportsman is a humane solution. Burtalser's mouth pursed. "It's unfortunate the same thing can't apply to human beings."

"Unfortunately! Surely you would not advocate eliminating surplus populations by the firing squad?"
The big man's face reddened. "You misunderstand me. I was merely thinking that the root of all our troubles seems to be over-population. Wasn't that the reason for Japan's invasion of China?"

She had to expand—expanding new territory was the only solution. And that, too, was the reason Germany went to war."
Jeff spied the waitress approaching with their dinner and was glad that he had recently written a letter!

When his transport had docked in San Francisco, travel conditions had made it impossible for him to get a train reservation for a week or more. He had written Aunt Theresa, explaining this. But then a friend who had a plane seat had found that his trip was unnecessary and had sold his ticket to Jeff. That had been only yesterday, and the letter had been sent by airmail the evening before.

Had it reached Madder Hall yet? Had it perhaps been intercepted by the impostor? If so, the man now sitting at the table with him, who had a plane seat had found that his trip was unnecessary and had sold his ticket to Jeff. That had been only yesterday, and the letter had been sent by airmail the evening before.

But mail service in East Henley was thoroughly unreliable. It might still be possible to catch the letter at the local post office. Jeff decided to be there when it opened in the morning. If he could stop that letter, he would have time to look into things before deciding what action to take—or before some one took action against him.

He tried to relax and sleep—to force a blankness over his brain, but it was a vain effort. Blurred mental pictures of Woody and Aunt Theresa were superimposed on more recent ones of a striking blonde, saying, commandingly, "Take me to Madder Hall," of blank-eyed Willie Sparrow and his flutery mother, of the grotesque Mr. Burtalser and his outrageous hunting garb.

And over them all, clearer than the rest, was the image of a girl with raven-black hair and deep blue eyes. Myra Kinsley, a girl of whom he had no right even to dream.

THE sun, streaming through the window, awakened him. It was later than he liked. He stared dazedly at his watch.

Suddenly, something clicked in his brain. The watch had been moved! Before retiring, he had placed it with his wallet on the small table beside his bed, the wallet containing a letter from Jeff's nearest kin. Now the articles were reversed!

He examined the wallet carefully. His credentials and money seemed intact; there was nothing missing.

He lay thinking it over. At last he decided that Willie Sparrow must have forgotten about his using this room and had fumbled around in the dark before remembering. Jeff's sleep, when it finally came, had been so sound that he had never heard a platoon of infantry slogging through the room. He'd ask Willie about it later.

When he went downstairs, the dining room was empty. He gulped down Mrs. Sparrow's anemic coffee, then headed for the front door. He almost reached it—

"Oh, Mr. Jeffrey," Mrs. Sparrow chirped behind him. "Did you sleep well?"

He turned. "Yes, thanks." "She beamed approvingly. "Willie's been a good one."

"Tell me, when does the post office open, Mrs. Sparrow?" Jeff asked.

"Eight o'clock—in just ten minutes!"

Jeff turned toward the door, and was about to open it when she stopped him again.

"Oh, Mr. Jeffrey, I almost forgot! Mr. Burtalser has left a message for you. He had a call from Washington early and had to leave. He said he wouldn't be able to go hunting with you."

That was a queer one, thought Jeff. But he was relieved. He had had no idea of accepting Burtalser's invitation and was glad that there would now be no necessity for making excuses.

The village looked shabbier than ever in the daylight, but it was good to be even this close to home. Jeff walked briskly, savoring the fresh air. He chose a back street in order to come up on the post office from the rear, hoping to avoid anyone who might remember him. It was going to be enough of a test to face old Mr. Peabody, the postal clerk.

But a girl was behind the grill, a girl whom Jeff did not know. "I'm going out to Madder Hall," he lied. "They're anxious about an airmail letter from San Francisco and want me to collect it."

"Another one?"
Another one! So the letter had already been delivered. Jeff's heart sank.
